Stonehill students have the opportunity to tailor their Environmental Sciences & Studies degree to suit their career and personal goals through course selection, internships and directed study.

The Bachelor of Science in Environmental Science is weighted toward the natural sciences, while the Bachelor of Arts in Environmental Studies focuses on the social sciences and humanities. Stonehill also offers a 3+2 Engineering Program, in which students receive a B.S. in Environmental Science from Stonehill College and a B.S. in Environmental Engineering or Environmental Earth Sciences from the University of Notre Dame.

CAMPUS RESOURCES

Shield Science Center
This is a $34 million, 89,000-square-foot state-of-the-art science center where students use equipment normally available only to graduate students.

RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES

Stonehill science students participate in highly competitive and prestigious summer research programs, working in university and industry labs across the U.S. and around the world. Through directed studies and independent research, students are exploring such topics as how atmospheric changes affect the location of right whale and humpback whale feeding grounds in the Gulf of Maine.

Stonehill Undergraduate Research Experience
This is an opportunity for students who have completed their first year at Stonehill to perform significant, publishable, full-time research under the guidance of and in collaboration with an experienced faculty researcher.

Recent example
Andrew Norkiewicz ’14 worked with John Lanci, professor of Religious Studies, on “EcoSpirituality: A Reader.” This reader approaches environmental studies from religious and scientific perspectives.
